

CCOMM appoints new Oil and Gas Sector Business Development Manager

CCOMM, the Audio-Visual and Videoconferencing experts, have today announced it has appointed Chris Gibson as its new Business Development Manager. Based in the Aberdeen office Chris will be responsible for spearheading the sales approach across the business, focusing specifically on the Oil & Gas sector where he has been working for the past 15 years.

Chris Gibson commented today that: "Based on its experienced, vibrant and high-calibre team, ambitious yet realistic views and depth of expertise, together with an already strong customer base, CCOMM is firmly established as a leading technology solutions provider. Looking to the future with the breadth of the CCOMM product and service portfolio and range of targets, we are now in a very strong position to offer a wide range of services to our customers in the Oil & Gas sector."

Building on CCOMM's existing comprehensive service and solution offerings, Chris will focus on identifying core customers and partners to develop relationships with and work with to create solutions that are tailored to each customer's requirements and budgets. This continues CCOMM firmly-held tradition that successful customer relationships stem from an in-depth understanding of business problems rather than a technology-led approach.

With experience in a business development role spanning more decades, Chris has been involved in numerous high value projects with a variety of large-scale companies predominately in Aberdeen, the Middle East and Far East Regions. During his career Chris has demonstrated a wide range of technical and commercial skills that has led to revenue growth for both clients and employers alike.

Chris will join existing team of members Paul Cooke and Lloyd Hughes in the management team here in Aberdeen. Bringing together a solid structure covering all commercial and technical areas.

Mike Entwistle, Managing Director of CCOMM stated: "The skills and knowledge Chris brings will significantly contribute to CCOMM in the long term. Through his addition we are sure of more success as we are able to realise our aims of expanding our existing customer base as well as establishing new relationships in the market."
